4 East Liberty Street is a 2 storey wood, board and batten house on a stone base. There is a gently sloping metal covered gable roof with a pronounced overhang which is supported by slender brackets. Larger brackets support the peaked gable which breaks the main roof in the center. Except for a small ell and porch additions on the rear, the house is a simple rectangle broken only by the first floor front which has two (flanking) bay windows and a relatively large porch, all joined together under a single por ch roof. The porch roof is supported by brackets and cut outs more elaborate than those on the main roof, and there is also a peaked gable which echoes the aforementioned gable in the main roof. Most windows (excluding the bay windows) are simple 1/1 or 2/2 with black trim, the rest of the vertically boarded house being gray. There are truss-like brackets across the gable ends on the sides of the house.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE (Include Personages, Dates, Events, Etc.)

4 East Street is very likely a remnant of one of the hotels that grew up near the Oakland Railroad Station after the Civil War, in this case perhaps the Oakland Hotel. If this cottage was associated with the hotel trade, it is an important reminder of the days when Oakland was the vacation center for prominent Americans.

Architecturally, this house is interesting as a well-preserved example of the mid-19th century cottage style house. Promulgated by Andrew Jackson Downing, this cottage is similar to those suggested in his Architecture of Country Houses of 1850; it is also close to those illustrated in an almost equally popular author's Woodward's Country Homes of 1860s. Both men suggested board and batten as an inexpensive substitute for stone, and Downing helped introduce a cottage design called 'Swiss' -- a design, needless to say, that had appeal for developers building mountain resotrs. Others on this street (G-18, G-19) are similar and are probably the work of the same builder; this type is also found in a couple of remaining cottages in Deer Park. 4 East Liberty is, however, perhaps the best preseved survivor.
